One half of the Executive Committee of the Ohio (Anti-Slavery) Society have resigned and "now occupy the true Disunion ground." A letter from Abby Kelley contains 67 new subscribers and nearly $200 in pledges obtained in the lower part of the state. Abby Kelley and S. S. Foster have now gone to the meeting of the Indiana State Anti-Slavery Society. B. S. Jones and the writer hold meetings every week in the surrounding country, and attend to the Anti-Slav[illegible] Bugle between times. Glasgow, Scotland. The writer explains that it will be impossible to send the contributions for the Boston fair by the middle of the month, but the addressee may safely expect to receive the box by the 18th December. "The Christian principle of anti-slavery is now being understood by the people of Scotland." Praises the zeal and faithfulness of Henry C. Wright. The Emancipation Society has succeeded in making the Free Church "feel very uncomfortable." Frederick Douglass is expected soon.

The writer could not circulate the narrative among his friends, especially ladies, until he had erased this paragraph. The writer's daughter has been very busy collecting articles for the Boston fair. The writer had intended to draw up a concise statement of the aims of the abolitionists, but was prevented by a severe illness. Has long been a regular reader of the Liberator and corresponds with Mr. Samuel May. Rejects, however, Garrison's "[illegible]nt of forbearance towards those who in any way differ [illegible] his views..." «Cork, Ireland» Explains at length the reason for the possible late arrival of the box from Cork. Describes the impression made by Frederick Douglass. "There never was a person who made a greater sensation in Cork amongst all religious bodies." The Methodists are still angry about his statements after three weeks. "In private he is greatly to be liked... He is the first intelligent slave who has ever visited Cork." The writer saw little of James N. Buffum. "We all liked him and felt for his homesickness." Conditions in Ireland are improving; the potato disease seems to be arrested by the frost.

Emerson argued that the Lyceum was "a popular thing designed for the benefit of all particularly for the most ignorant." He would not know how to address an assembly from which this class was excluded, and "if any were excluded it should be the cultivated classes." The writer hopes that Charles Sumner will also refuse to lecture. Sometimes the writer regrets being an Abolitionist, because of the knowledge gained of injustice and wrong. Mr. Emerson says that his friend Benjamin Rodman should have signed "that protest." «60 Broadway, Albany, N. Y.» There is little Anti-Slavery sentiment here. "New Organization seems to have crept in ... they have a male and female society." Last year they cast a hundred votes, this year twenty-five. "Many Liberty party men forgot when the day of election came around." Thinks that if W. Phillips should lecture here, it would do much good. Refers to the sitting of the Legislature. "The Whigs promise to make some effort towards restoring to the colored people their political rights." The writer has sold several of F. Douglass's books. Asks about a Mr. Wellington, and refers to his alleged "good r[illegible]son for not offering Miss Miles a situation in his sc[illegible]"

Notes

:Leicester, Mass.: These notes seem to have been taken at a series of meetings of the Leicester Anti-Slavery Association during the summer and fall of 1846. Most of the discussions centred about support of the Constitution and voting for pro-Slavery candidates. There were also arguments about the suppression of the Slave trade by England and America and the conduct of the American Churches respecting Slavery. Unsigned manuscript. 52pp. 5 x 7 1/2 in.

[Dublin, Ireland?] Asks why William Basset's name is retained as one of the VicePresidents of the Mass. Antislavery Society. Gives domestic news. The writer is treasurer and corresponding secretary of his little (A.S.) society, and happy to promote the addressee's objects. One of F. Douglass' converts, a Methodist, said that Douglass' visit had done much good in this sect. The Rev. Mr. Simpson G. Morrisson, a young Independent minister, gave three admirable antislavery lectures. The writer thinks the addressee's Report remarkably clear and full, though sometimes her "ironic flings" may puzzle the uninitiated. If the warm impulses roused could have a fair development, "there is scarcely a lady in Belfast who would not be anxious to join," but the usual leaders in good works, "offended by the uncompromising tone of Mr. Douglas«s» in regard to the Free Church of Scotland," are either enemies or "hollow friends." A useful step would be made if especially the young people could be united in some work. To Mrs. Maria (Weston) Chapman

«Tribune Office, New York» Explains the enclosure of eighteen dollars. Expresses pleasure in the addressee's report of the fair in the last Liberator. States parenthetically that the writer "located Mary Anne «Mrs. Johnson» at Auburn instead of Sing Sing. The places are some 300 miles apart. But no matter". The reception for Cassius Clay was satisfying; people applauded sentiments, when coming from him, "for which all faithful abolitionists have suffered reproach and persecution." The writer wishes an account for the Tribune of the meeting this week. If the writer cannot do it, "Edmund Quincy perhaps will".

The writer is only a tradesman, with nothing in his position, wealth, birth, or demeanor to commend him to a gentleman, which he supposes Abdy to be. It is more difficult to start and sustain a periodical here than in America, and the writer doubts if Abdy would be the man (to have charge of it). In respect to a proposition for an anti-slavery convention in London, the writer thinks that London conventions "do hardly any good." The preachers t[illegible] would take part in it are ignorant about American slaver[illegible]ly some such paper as the Liberator ... is calculated t[illegible]pply the void." In opening the :Bristol, Eng.: The writer explains that it was his purpose to obtain information about American abolitionism to use in a little paper which he is preparing for the people of his neighborhood. Elucidates, throughout the letter, the difference between the British and the American method of advocating anti-slavery in public. A letter from a Mrs. Fry, which the writer sent Mr. Samuel May, appeared in the Liberator of Jan. 30, though with the name suppressed. A liberal benefactor to the Boston fair, to whom the writer lent this number, was shocked by the heading and the discussion of the "Rights of God" (the article so named in the paper) "and with Mr. Garrison's comments upon the whole affair." To Rev. Samuel May Jr.

«Bristol, England» The writer acknowledges various letters from Rev. May. Reveals identity of Amicus as Mr. Frank Boult of Liverpool. Explains the situation of the Inquirer and its editor, Mr. Hincks. Tells Rev. May not to expect too much from his (J.B.E.'s) pamphlet. Douglass is still in Scotland. The second edition of the Narrative is published. The writer speaks of Joseph Barker, who said in a speech that certain Sheffield manufacturers were making Bowie knives with "Death to Abolitionists" stamped on them. Asks figures on escaping slaves.

«Rochester, n.Y.» In Western New York "the great body of honest-hearted abolitionists" are connected with the Liberty Party. Its leaders, such as Gerrit Smith and William Goodell, "are sound on the Church question." Suggests that if the Constitutional question could be thoroughly discussed in Western New York, many converts would be won for the doctrine of "No union with slaveholders!" The circulation of the Liberator would be more effective than that of the Standard, which is not "very well adapted to our latitude." Tells of a proposition to support Frederick Douglass as a lecturing agent.

«Boston» Recounts a visit in Cambridge, apparently to attend a Harvard Commencement. The writer stayed with Sylvia, née Ammidon. Describes the procession into the church. Mentions "that painted stick Robert Winthrop." Describes Edward Everett as "rather a good looking man intelligent and not vulgar!" During the singing of a hymn, "in came the Godlike"(Daniel Webster) who was greeted with prolonged stamping and clapping. The writer praises Everett's address, and describes the reception at his presidential house. Negotiations are under way for an (A.S.) office in Devonshire Street. The writer voted against it, but "F«rancis» Jackson is crazy to have it." F. Jackson is involved in pla[illegible] a commemoration of (Charles Turner) Torrey and maintenance of his family. E.G.L. «Concord, N.H.» The writer gives an account of her restful visit at Dr. Farnsworth's and then of her journey with him from Groton to Concord, N.H. to attend a meeting. (Stephen S.) Foster spoke in the afternoon. The writer describes a sumptuous tea at Mrs. Bullard's, with whom she stayed. For the evening meeting the Representative Hall had been obtained through Jack Hale. (Parker) Pillsbury spoke, followed by Loring ~~Irving~~ Moody. Mrs. Bullard said that N.P. Rogers had tried to get John Chandler out of the Insane Asylum to disturb the meeting.

To Deborah Weston

[Brush Hill, (Milton, Mass.)] The first part of this letter covers much the same ground as No.59. Garrison and C. L. Remond had arrived for the next day's meeting in Concord. "The Rogers girls were there, but of course no greeting passed between us." The writer and Dr. Farnsworth left at five the following morning. A letter from Emma Weston advised the writer to come home, but Dr. Farnsworth urged her to stay.

The writer attended the Unitarian church and heard a good sermon against the war. Called on Dr. Farnsworth's 93 year-old father. Returned to town with Dr. F., then went to Weymouth, and is now visiting [illegible]rush Hill.

«Federal St., Boston» The writer describes a Board meeting of the American Anti-Slavery Society, at which the Nat. Anti-Slavery Standard was discussed. "Garrison was violently in favour of initials," while J. R. Lowell and E. Quincy were against them. The writer remarks on Garrison's attitude toward S. H. Gay in regard to the management of the paper. E. Quincy was appointed to act for the Executive Committee for three months. Garrison's proposal to go to England met with a lukewarm response. Finally a resolution was passed asking Garrison to represent the American Society abroad. Lowell "meant in the future to p[illegible]h all his poetry first in the Standard." He told about [illegible]l Longfellow's sermon against the Mexican war and the pr[illegible]st of the man from Mississippi:

Stresses especially the need of awakening "the sympathies of shildhood in behalf of the oppressed," and therefore of calling the attention of mothers and governnesses to the evils of slavery. He has the same view of the Constitution as the Mass. Anti-Slavery Society, does not sympathize with N. P. Rogers on the matter of the Herald of Freedom and is not affiliated with the British & Foreign Anti-Slavery Society. He proposed a meeting in London, independent of "Broad Street Convention. All arrangements have been made, and the writer expects a "radical meeting." Thompson wants to come to the United States and lect-on British India. If he co[illegible], it will be in the Fall. «Dedham, Mass.» The writer describes a visit to a hermit, who "behaved with great civility," even though he was "somewhat aghast at finding that he was not safe from the dictator of Dedham even in the woods of Natick." Reports a discussion with W. Phillips about S. H. Gay's management of the National Anti-Slavery Standard. First, Phillips proposed to send for Gay at once "... so as to see if we can't get into line with him again." The second idea was to let him have his own way and see how it will work. On the matter of signed contributions Gay and Garrison will differ. The writer asks if he should not write a confide[illegible] letter to (Oliver) Johnson to see if he could take hold [illegible] Standard in case Gay should quit. Asks if anything has [illegible]en done about Lewis Hayden's credentials as agent.

«Dublin, Ireland» The writer doubts if Garrison, who leaves home today, will be received with the same éclat as Elihu Burritt, "who is more level to the capacity of the crowd-his 50 languages make them stare," and the measure of his philanthropy is enough for them. The English people don't like those who try to force them to think. The writer thinks that the National Anti-Slavery Standard is not equal to what it was before Sydney H. Gay was married. However, (W. H.) Channing's speech at the Convention is worth a year's subscription. Mentions two excellent letters from F. Douglass in the Liberator. Anne Allen writes th[illegible] stirred up by the Free Church excitement, Douglass surp[illegible] himself in Dublin. The writer

«Philadelphia» Invites Caroline Weston and her sisters to come to the annual meeting at Kennett and visit at the writer's house. Edmund Quincy is also welcome to stay there. Remarks on the prospects of Garrison's influence in England. The disposition to hear Frederick Douglass at the British & Foreign Anti-Slavery Society's meeting "seemed a little evidence of repentance..." Would have preferred the Standard to be less severe in its treatment of this Society. The writer desires gentle dealings "even with poor Cassius» M. Clay - so lamentably fallen & degraded." Remembers his anti-pacifistic utterances. Clay's paper reaches many in the South, where the anti-slavery in [illegible] True American might do good, wherefore the writer would have it continue to circulate.

«Honeoye, Ontario, N.Y.» A letter from the addressee to Lewis Tappan has been forwarded to the writer, so that he might answer her inquiries about American abolitionists. In explaining the divisions among these the writer refers to the parallel case of the Protestant Reformation. Alludes also to a proposal by Luther to observe Thursday as a sabbath. The American anti-slavery movement found American Christians already divided. Explains the power of slaveholders in America, the need of agitating among the people, and the rôle of the church as educator of the popular conscience. The British know little of the sacrifi[illegible] to which American abolitionists are called. The opposition [illegible]nti-slavery because of its alleged hostility to "divine [illegible]itutions" turns som abolitionists against these institutions. The writer differs in many

«To Mrs. Maria (Weston) Chapman» No.78

«Playford Hall, (Ipswich) England» Mr.Clarkson had a visit from Mr. F.P. Buffham (James N. Buffum) who was going to return to America to take charge of F. Douglass' business for a year, thus enabling the latter to stay in England. The writer wishes that Douglass were a full-blood black, as she fears "your pro-slavery people will attribute his preeminent abilities to the white blood that is in his veins." Gives information about a portrait of Mr. Clarkson.

«London» The writer did not "doubt the purity of intention" which led the addressee to write about him as she did to Mr. R.D. Webb. Yet he would have thought it more friendly if she had chosen to give her counsel directly "and free from what I must regard an uncalled for and invidious comparison of myself and Mr. «J.N.» Buffum." George Thompson urged the writer to attend the British & Foreign Anti.Slavery Society meeting, mainly in the interest of the Free Church agitation. The writer told the meeting that he was an old organizationist. In Carlisle, England, the writer secured contributions for the Boston fair.
